(Signed) Miss Margaret Williams, President of the Electrical Lehnert, Walnut St., Glendale, L. L. Exposition and head of the Local Food Administration Board, was congratulated on a fine presentation of Mr. Hoover's work in saving the find of he nation.

The scope of Red Cross activities and the use to which the recently donated fund of one hundred million differs is being put can best be realized after reviewing the extensive Red Cross exhibits on the third floor of the exposition. A score of workrooms re engaged in making hospital supstandard type motor ambulances, a hospital way metro and a field kitchen. The United States Medical Corps co-operated with the Red Cross in preparing a miniature model showing step by step the work of handling wounded from the trenches to the base hospitals, including stretche-carrying, dressing stations, ambu-lance service, field hospitals, trans-portation by train and the base hos-nitals.

of all was that presented by the navy with models of ancient and modern with models of ancient and modern ships of war, including the newest types of submarines and destroyers. Prominently displayed over the models were immortal expressions of famous sea fighters of the past, including that of John Paul Jones, "We have not yet begun to fight," and Perry's "Don't give up the ship."

The army section displayed the wireless and telephone instruments used for communication in the trenches and also an army biplane.

The Consolidated Telegraph and Electrical Subway Company had a novel exhibit in the form of a section of underground construction in New York City, showing the method bewinch electric light and power caides are carried beneath the surface of the streets and the manner of distributing electric current from a sub-station to the customer. This display is particularly interesting, as this is the particularly interesting, as this is the ning of Edison service and also the anniversary of the beginning of un-derground distribution in New York bronze plate, which will mark the site of the first Edison generating plant, erected at No. 257 Pearl Street
